CAMINO'S PALM GROVE CIRCLE

The Palm Grove Circle area will be developed in three phases

The design and layout of the forested 3.8 acre community area at Camino Del Rio has now been developed into a vision that enhances and embraces the beauty of the country club setting. Caribbean style planner and architect Dale Langfoss, a regular visitor to Belize for over 15 years has captured the essence of the country in the design and planning of the new 'Palm Grove Circle'. The 'Palm Grove Circle' is located near the center of the residential area and will provide a clubhouse, swimming pool, bird-watching tower, and walking paths for residents to enjoy nature close-up. The layout is based on a circular shaped area with walking paths along the four directional quadrants. All trails within the compound will lead back to this central recreational space. The first phase of development will consist of paving the north, south, and western paths that convene into a central relaxation area containing a fountain and sitting benches. The second phase incorporates the construction of the two-story clubhouse that features an office, meeting rooms, lounge and dining areas, and kitchen facilities that may be used by residents and guests. A sitting area that leads into the outdoor veranda and the natural canopy will allow visitors to relax in and near the jungle forest that surrounds them. A restaurant, medical facility, health club area, and more are part of the future vision in Phases three and four. The use of the space will provide owners a one-stop shop for many necessities when spending time at their full or part-time home. The entire area will be bordered by various palm tree species that are native to Belize. Phase one is expected to be initiated in early to late summer of 2008. The construction of the first of three buildings that will make up the clubhouse space is expected to be underway in 2009.

BIKING IN THE CARIBBEAN

The Caribbean offers a warm place all year-long for road and mountain biking adventures

Looking for a place where you can do some biking all year-long? Many Caribbean countries offer plenty of warm weather and ample trails that are great for biking. 'Outside' magazine recently featured the mountain-bike-friendly island of Montserrat, offering 39 square miles of lush rainforests, waterfalls, and sawtooth mountains. As one of the Caribbean's least-developed locations, Montserrat is a small, unspoiled volcanic island in the heart of the West Indies and 'fat-tire' devotees come for the tortuous terrain and the friendly competition. The annual Mountain Bike Challenge, a week-long festival sponsored by Island Bikes is being held this year in November. Whether or not you're around for the festival, you'll have no shortage of challenging trails to choose from. One of the most spectacular off-road routes is a day-long trip through the South Soufriere Hills. You'll get your warm-up on the climb to the top of the 1,700-foot Galway's Soufriere but will have ample time to catch your breath as you race downhill through head-high ferns and bamboo thickets. From there, you'll cross woodlands, steep gullies, and banana fields before ending with a rollercoaster ride over the Centre Hills going back into town. Although there are many locations throughout the Caribbean that provide for great trails with lush surroundings, Montserrat is one of the newest and nicest spots around.

Mountain biking in the Caribbean is a unique vacation experience

AN ONLINE APPROACH TO HOME BUILDING

A new trend in home building has been created with the Tareig Homes website that will soon become available. As owners at the new Camino Del Rio community gear up to begin the construction of their vacation or retirement home, the latest in online technology provides a user-friendly tool to assist in the development. Now you can initiate the building of your home anytime and anywhere as you view the selections for creating your dream home with one-stop shopping on the internet at www.tareighomes.com.

Created as a central location of information for owners and builders, the site displays the home styles that are available in each of the TAREIG developed communities with elevation views, floor plans, and luxury feature selections. An owner in any of the TAREIG communities will be able to view the standard features and upgrades available for their selected home and begin to build their own dream living space. Once the construction effort begins, photos of the progress will be available online, allowing the owner to keep in touch with the development activity during the critical construction stages including foundation setup, exterior walls and roof, interior walls, and final completion. This new site will save time and money while still providing owners control of the home construction process.

Tareighomes Website will be available by late Spring, 2008
